Last summer, my husband and I took our annual trip to the beach of our childhood, where we always meet people from our past. While battling the waves, my husband saw a familiar face in the water next to him. "Hey!" he shouted. "Didn't we go to the same high school?" "No," the man replied. "The same college?" "No." "But I'm sure I know you from somewhere," insisted my husband. "Do you know me?" "Sure," came the smiling reply. "You asked me the same questions last year."

Not everything on the Internet is free. Using some services can get people into trouble. Music file-sharing services may seem harmless, but they are not. They are harmful to artists and legally dangerous to those who use them. These networks allow you to download, or share copyrighted music free of charge, without the permission of the musicians. It's no different than shoplifting a CD from a store. That's against the law. We should respect the people who have created our favorite music.

“What (a) an ugly boy!” many people whispered when they saw Hans Christian Andersen. His hands and feet were very big. His eyes were tiny and his nose was so big. Young Hans lived a sad life. His father was a poor (b) shoemaker, and his mother was often ill. So he created an imaginary world of his own, designing toy theaters and carving tiny figures to act in them.

In 1819, when (c) Hans was 14, he made a big decision. He left his home and traveled to the city of Copenhagen. “Here,” declared Hans, “I will make my dream come true. I will become a famous actor.” But it soon became evident that the dream would not come true at all. For three years, Hans tried to find an acting job but had no luck. When he was 17, Hans sadly returned home. He kept a journal, which he filled with his dreams, thoughts, and ideas for stories. In his journal, Hans wrote about (d) an ugly bird that was laughed at by the ducklings in the farmyard. But the little bird was not a duck at all, and it grew into (e) an elegant swan. Now, this book is known as “The Ugly Duckling.” We know that it is the story of Andersen himself.

"I like basketball, but I've got to give it up. I've thought about it, and it really hurts. I know what I want to do and what I have to do. I've got to schedule more time for my studies." This is the decision of basketball star Jeb Langer. He is completing his second year of play at Temple University. Langer played guard during his last two years at King High School. During his last year he was voted most valuable player. He was averaging twenty-five points a game. That caught the eye of the university coach.

Langer is leaving the university team to spend more time on his demanding studies. He admits, "During the basketball season, someone else does some of my papers. I hope to go to law school after four years at the university. I can't have someone else doing my work." He says, "I'm sure some guys can play team sports in college and still get a good education. However, I have decided I can't continue on the team and make the good grades I'm going to need. Having a good grade point average is necessary for being admitted to law school."

(A)

After some time, one of his friends asked him what made him so sad. At first he didn't dare to say anything, but he finally told his friend that he had been worrying about the hidden money. His friend advised him to give that money to others. As soon as he heard this, he decided to bring out the bag and spend the money for the poor. From then on he could spend his days singing merrily.

(B)

One day when the poor man was away, the rich man went to his house and threw a bag of money into his living room. When the poor man came home and saw the bag, he was very happy and carefully hid the bag of money. Soon, he began to fear that it might be stolen, or that he might be accused of having stolen it, and he did stop singing and being cheerful.

(C)

There was once a poor man who made just enough money to support himself and his family. All day he sang and passed his time happily, while his neighbors were busy and anxious about their wealth and never sang. They bitterly envied the poor man's joy. One of the rich men made up his mind to stop him singing and being so happy.
