I am invited to formal ceremonies such as the Grammy Awards. There, I see a lot of celebrities crying out of joy or wearing a broad smile right in front of me. Sometimes I feel I am the object of envy, especially from frantic teens. That's because I can see their idols at an arm's length and touch them on the mouth. My height varies and can be adjusted depending on the person using me. And I always find myself standing before a large audience, which makes some people feel nervous when they stand before me. In general, I am happy to help a person to speak to his or her audience in a more convenient way.

Most writers and poets suffer under the genius syndrome. It is assumed that writing is a divine gift and that if you have that gift, you should lock yourself away for three years and then come out with a masterpiece. If you have to study writing, then you're not a genius and you shouldn't be a writer. In fact, the intellectual privately agree with it. However, Nicholas Delbanco doesn't believe the idea. He says that if you want to improve your tennis skills, tennis lessons are a good idea. He doesn't emphasize work that's entirely subjective and urges his students to imitate rather than create.

26. Any traveler who is a fan of modern art will want to drop by the very successful Saatchi Gallery while visiting London. The gallery owes a lot of its popularity to the _____ that its works have generated in recent years. Among the works on display there, visitors can see Hirst's dead animals in large glass tanks, and Emin's untidy bed, which she sold to the gallery for £150,000. These works have provoked a lot of debates on what art actually is. Some people might think these works are not even art, but they certainly make viewers think and react.

27. Today the suburban ring can be regarded as an outer city which increasingly controls the economic and social life of the metropolitan sector. At the same time, it should be noted that the rapid growth of suburbs has created many problems. For example, numerous suburbs have had trouble raising enough money for such essential services as police and fire protection. _____, residents often engage in debates over the quality of the schools in the communities and the amount of taxes required to support them. Particularly in older suburbs, population change may produce conflict between social groups.

④ Nevertheless ⑤ In other words

28. Hundreds of celebrities fail to make a favorable impression because they don't _____. They are so much concerned with what they are going to say next that they do not keep their ears open. Very important people have said that they prefer good listeners to good talkers, but the ability to listen seems rarer than almost any other good trait. And not only important people strongly desire a good listener, but ordinary folks do, too. As the Reader's Digest once said: "Many persons call a doctor when all they want is an audience."

- ① use common sense ② listen attentively
③ control themselves ④ give proper examples
⑤ respond positively

29. When it comes to teaching moral behavior, it's not what you say but what you do that counts the most. The negative side of this is illustrated by the words "The footsteps a child follows are most likely the ones his parents thought they had covered up." Positive role-modeling, on the other hand, can bring big rewards. Every year, Amy's parents gave holiday dinners to unfortunate families. At age ten, Amy organized a fund-raiser for giving free meals to poor children. In an age when so many kids are thinking only of themselves, how did Amy give a helping hand? "_____" she says simply.

- ① I read lots of books ② I watched my parents
③ I made a lot of friends ④ I listened to my teacher
⑤ I wanted to get a good grade

Social sciences study the area of human behavior. Human behavior patterns vary from place to place and group to group. However, natural sciences are somewhat different. When a chemist studies hydrogen, he can assume that one hydrogen atom is very much like another, wherever it is found, and that the conditions surrounding it can be quite accurately controlled. The same is true when a physicist measures a metal bar; he can be quite sure that it will not stretch or shrink in length as long as natural conditions are the same. Because of _____ of their subject matter, natural sciences are often called "easy sciences."

- ① the predictable nature ② the irregular application

31. In everything you do in your family, you should keep in mind the miracle of the Chinese bamboo tree. After the seed for this amazing tree is planted, you see nothing, absolutely nothing, for four years except for a tiny shoot coming out of a bulb. During those four years, all the growth is underground in a root structure that spreads deep and wide in the earth. But then in the fifth year the Chinese bamboo tree grows up to eighty feet! Many things in family life are like the Chinese bamboo tree. If you're patient and keep working, that "fifth year" will come, and you will be astonished at the growth and change you see taking place.

- ① the growing stage of a bamboo tree
② Chinese preference for a bamboo tree
③ the strong family ties in China
④ the distribution of bamboo trees
⑤ the value of patience in a family

32. On the surface, e-commerce appears to offer a big environmental bonus by eliminating hundreds of thousands of trips to the shopping mall. A closer look, however, reveals that e-commerce may not be so friendly to the environment. On-line book shopping, for example, may reduce energy use by less frequent visits to bookstores, but this actually creates more serious problems. Every book ordered on the Web is heavily packaged and travels on a transportation network. Instead of shipping, say, 10 copies of "Harry Potter" in one box to a bookstore, 10 boxes with one copy are shipped to e-commerce customers. After all, this method requires more plastic bags which take a long time to decay.

If you take a closer look at your life, you'll find that you have a life purpose you've been trying to carry out. For some people, their purpose may be as simple as raising a family or being a good friend or emotionally encouraging others. These purposes may sound simple or insignificant, but consider how they can be a pleasure to many other lives. Your life purpose is eventually what benefits you and others as well. I mean, if you do something that gives you a better life and makes you feel better, it's for the benefit of all. Sometimes, what you are aiming at may seem like an unimportant detail, but it does good to the whole.

No matter how _____ (A) it seems, your life purpose turns out to be _____ (B) to others.

Various jobs may require specialized skills such as proficiency in mathematics or business administration. The single most valuable skill an individual can have, however, is probably the ability to avoid and resolve disagreement and argument. This is because disharmony is the last thing an organization needs. No organization succeeds when its members don't get along with one another. We often see individuals with irritating or cruel personalities may be successful to a certain extent, but they can eventually destroy the organization by driving away its most capable members. That is why a smooth personality is worth far more than impressive academic training or technical ability.

The ability to handle _____ (A) is much more valuable than technical skills in an organization, because it can help keep every member _____ (B).

The whole day was a blaze of sunshine. The ghostly winter silence had given way to the great spring murmur of awakening life. This murmur arose from all the land, filled with the joy of living. It came from the things that lived and moved again, things which had not moved during the long months of frost. The willows were bursting out in young buds. Shrubs and vines were putting on fresh clothes of green. Woodpeckers were booming and knocking in the forest. Squirrels were chattering and birds were singing.

40. In an increasingly global food market, one of the most significant selections a consumer can make is to buy locally grown food. In much of the world, farmers no longer sell food to their neighbors. Instead, they sell it into a long and complex food chain of which they are a tiny part. For example, potatoes sold in Peru's supermarkets are from the United States, even though Peru boasts more varieties of potato than any other country. Buying food produced locally will help take some of the profits of food traders, brokers, shippers and processors, and put them back in the pocket of the farmers and the rural community.

41. Asked when they feel satisfied with their life, most people say they feel so when they think they are superior to others. That's true. Many feelings of satisfaction or dissatisfaction have their roots in how we compare ourselves to others. If we spend most of our time thinking only about those who have more, it's no wonder that we feel unhappy. When we are surrounded by only those who have less, we feel grateful. Even though we have exactly the same life either way, our feeling about our life can vary tremendously based on who we compare ourselves with.

One 10-year-old boy decided to study judo despite the fact that he had lost his left arm in a terrible car accident. The boy began lessons with an old judo master. The boy was doing well, so he couldn't understand why, after three months of training, the master had taught him only one move. Feeling a little ____ (A) ____, the boy said to his teacher, "Shouldn't I be learning more moves?" The teacher replied, "This is the only move you'll ever have to know." Not quite understanding, the boy kept training.

Several months later, the master took the boy to his first tournament. Surprising himself, the boy easily won his first two matches. The third match proved to be more difficult, but the boy used his one move to win the match. Still amazed by his ____ (B) ____, the boy was now in the finals. This time, his opponent was bigger, stronger, and more experienced. For a while, the boy appeared to be overmatched but he went on with his match. When his opponent made a critical mistake, the boy used his move to pin him. The boy had won the match and the tournament. He was the champion.

On the way home, the boy and his teacher reviewed every move in each and every match. Then the boy summoned the courage to ask what was really on his mind. "Sir, how did I win the tournament with only one move?" "You won for one ____ (C) ____," the teacher answered. "You've almost mastered one of the most difficult throws in all of judo. And the only known defense for that move is for your opponent to grab your left arm."

The happy also value pleasures that involve personal effort. For Ken Rogers, happiness was a cottage on a small lake near Auburn, Indiana. As a young factory worker, Rogers was determined to give his three children summers they would always remember. So he cleared a plot of land, built a cottage, and tied a $1 rope to a willow tree for a swing. Rogers did everything himself because at the time he was in poverty. Now, when his grown children visit, it's his labors of love that they recall most fondly.

(B)

The rich and unhappy are likely to prize possessions such as a fancy car or an expensive necklace. Unfortunately, they don't see objects as a link to other people but as something to stand out from others. For example, Doris Duke was the only child of a multi-millionaire. By the time she reached adulthood, she could fulfill any desire—from the B-25 bomber she remodeled for luxury travel, to her ceiling-high goldfish tanks. Yet when she died three years ago, news reports detailed a lonely life of deep unhappiness.

(C)

On the other hand, happy people derive deeper satisfaction from their connection with one another rather than the comforts of money. For Leo and Shirley Smith, their most valued possessions are photo albums that show 52 years of family history. Mr. Smith says, "They're a record of who we are and where we came from—the separation of war, my successful business, two daughters' happy marriage, a son's birth defect and Shirley's cancer." Now the albums remind the Smiths that through thick and thin they managed to laugh, to enjoy life and, most of all, to find happiness in each other.

I didn't know _____ until I was going through her things after she died. I discovered something I had long forgotten.

One night, I recalled the events of the day and how badly I had behaved toward my mother. Quietly I slipped out of bed and picked up a pencil and paper from the dresser, then tiptoed into the kitchen. I quickly wrote (a) a short letter asking my mother to forgive me for being so naughty. I didn't want my brothers and sisters to read (b) my "sorry" note, so I added a postscript: "Please don't let anyone else see this." Then I put the letter under my mother's pillow.

The next morning I found a return note for (c) the message under my pillow. My mother wrote that she loved me and forgave me. This became my way of apologizing whenever I talked back or disobeyed. My mother always left a return note, but she never spoke about our under-the-pillow messages in front of the family. Not even when we were grown.

When my mother passed away, I had to go through her personal belongings. In her desk was a bundle of notes tied with a faded ribbon. On top was (d) a message, which read, "In the event of my death, please destroy these." I turned over the packet and glanced at the handwriting on the bottom. To my surprise I recognized my childish writing, "P.S.: Please don't let anyone else see (e) this. Love, Eddie."
